The RAAM offers same day walk-in services, no appointment necessary, for people living with alcohol, opioid or other substance use concerns.

This the first Aboriginal led, community based addiction medicine program in Toronto utilizing a culturally safe approach to service.

Community Support
- Assessment of substance use concerns by an addictions medicine specialist (nurse practitioner or doctor)
- Medication assisted treatment for substance use concerns
- Access to ongoing community support/counselling
- Referrals to community support services
- Accompaniments
- Access to the services of AHT for primary care, mental health, cultural and social needs

Our program recognizes the ongoing impact that colonization and intergenerational trauma have had on Aboriginal people.

Accessing the Addiction Medicine program may be the first step on a person’s healing journey.

Traditional services are also available to provide knowledge about Aboriginal culture and identity. This includes access to traditional healers and elders as well as traditional ceremonies.
